There are those who rejoice in this erodus. We wish it Godspeed - but on all the principles of social and political philosophy it must be considered a minfortune. Grant that it earned be belied; grant that it earned be belied; grant that it arents or roetpones some immediate anneyances; grant that, as we really don't know what to do with the people, they are welcome to take care of themselves and dispose of themselves in what way they may piease; but that is only the case of an unmanageable son, which is a misfortune, even when the cause of our gried relieves un trons further anxieties. Who will not reproach himself when this is the conclusion of a long embarrassment? "We have not been able to manage this child of curs. It is betaking shelf to America. Well, we shall have less trouble for the future." If we could growold and spathetic, we whould, in a dell way, be all the more considerable for it; but not so if we retain our youthful sycapathies.

Another discussed the source of the control of the writ is discussed. Another discussed the probably, is cline public opinion were more strongly to the sade of the correspondent. The solicitor who writes to the London Shar to deep that any arrangement had been effected bears the same and writes from the same address as a person who has for a long time past been advertising for clients in the London papers. Thus person informs "the emburraised" that he will advance money, and will insure "protection in case from $6$, payable in instainments." This is followed by the very significant announcement. "Divorce cases condentially conducted." The resider is informed of the "original advertisement, is 50," whereby we presume is meant that Mr. Wells has been "advertising for clients" for nearly a quarter of a century, Wether the petitioner above mentioned will prove a satisfactory client remains to be seen.

I noticed upon the hurricane deck to day an elderly darkey, with a very philosophical and servospective sast of countenance, squatted upon his bandle, toosting his shina against the chimney and apparently plunged into a state of profound meditation. By law, as every lawye. The profiles in the United States Court probably knows, there are two regular terms of the Court during the year. One of these terms commence on the first Monday of July, and the other on the third Monday of Docember. At the conclusion of these terms the Court does not adjourne size dis, but simply adjourns to the first day of the next adjourned term, while at the end of each of the two terms, which are absolutely created and

A LADY RUN OVER.—A lady, name un-known, in attempting to cross Lake street, corner of Clark, yesterday afternoon, was knocked down and run over by a dray. It was thought she was seriously injured, being much bruised about the head, and fears were entertained that her kip was dislocated. She had immediate assistance ron-dered her. Our informant could not find out her name or residence. Much consure was bestowed upon the drives, but in the crowd of vehicles, and slippery state of the street, it is hard to say who was to biame.
